The Rural General Practice Network (Rural GP Network) is a nationwide membership-based organisation formed in 1988 to address the growing need for rural general practice training. Its membership is comprised of general practitioners, extended health care providers (ECPs) and the Auckland District Health Board.

The Rural General Practice Network (RGN) is the only national organisation representing the rural general medical workforce and their patients from a rural general practice perspective. The RGN is a key partner in the delivery of rural general practice services through its network of rural general practices, publicly funded DHBs, and private sector providers.
